'Damn little research, lot of talking'

Orescanin blasts F-Senate resolution

By Marcia Bullard
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Campus treasurer Dan Orescanin blasted a Faculty Senate resolution calling for more library funds Thursday.

He said the group did "damn little research and a lot of talking" about the problem.

"They didn't tell us (administrators) how much more money needs to be spent or where it should come from," Orescanin said, in a phone interview. "Sure, we'd like to spend more money on the library, but the funds aren't available in the budget. I don't think they were trying to help out."

The Faculty Senate passed a resolution Tuesday asking the administration to give more money to the library for buying books this year and in the future. Library Affairs Dean Ralph McCoy announced this week that "severe cutbacks" are being made in book purchases because of the tight financial situation.

Orescanin objected that the resolution did not offer any remedies to the situation.

"We don't have a copy of the internal budget," said JoAnne Thorpe, chairwoman of the Faculty Senate. "We thought the Faculty Senate was in a position to recommend policy to the administration and that's what we did."

"We realize this has to be an internal budget adjustment, she added. "The people who prepare the budget should know where there is enough money for reallocation."

In fiscal year 1973, Orescanin said the library spent $519,398 for books. He asked for that amount plus $274,000 for this fiscal year, but said the Illinois Board of Higher Education (IBHE) denied the extra $274,000 and the governor cut out an additional $134,000. That left the library with its present $350,000 budget.

Orescanin said he has asked the IBHE for about $650,000 for next year's library budget.

There are still some alternatives for this year "if the faculty is willing," he said.

"If the faculty agreed not to fill any present vacancies this year, and agreed not to spend any of the money set aside for hiring teaching assistants this year, we could use that money," he said. "And if they want to stop using their telephones and other commodities, we could use that money. Or the faculty members could all offer a chunk of their paychecks to the library—I haven't seen anyone do that yet."

Thorpe contended Orescanin's suggestions are illegal because the money is already designated for personnel and contractual services. Once allocated, funds cannot be spent in other areas unless approved by the IBHE. Library books are bought with money allocated under "equipment" in the budget.

Another area in which the faculty could save dollars would be in the "amount of trash that gets printed on duplicating machines around here," Orescanin said. He charged that too much money is spent by people "propagandizing their friends" by using the copying machine.

"The trash we mimeograph is what the administration sends us to act on," Thorpe rebutted. "We have to print recommendations from committees which were activated by people like Orescanin, President David R. Derge and Keith Leasure." (Leasure is vice president for academic affairs.)

Money that is being spent for a new parking garage cannot be reallocated for the library, Orescanin said, because the money has already been specified for parking lot improvements. When people buy decals, they are told that part of that money will be used to upgrade parking facilities.

"If we tell people all of a sudden that they are buying parking decals to buy library books, I don't think people in civil service positions would go along with that," he said. "I don't think we'd get by without a lawsuit on that."

Illinois Senate refuses to confirm James Nagle for Board of Trustees

By Marcia Bullard
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Illinois Senate refused to confirm James Nagle as SIU's new Board of Trustees member Thursday afternoon.

The party-line vote on Nagle was 29-11 in his favor, but one vote short of the 30 required to seat the new trustee. Senate Republicans attacked his affiliation with the Illinois Education Association (IEA) and the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) before voting against the appointment.

"I'm disappointed but it's not unexpected," Nagle said. "This just seems like an effort by the Senate to keep people who know about education out of positions of responsibility in education."

Nagle, 28, is an English teacher at Danville Junior College. He said in a telephone interview his support of collective bargaining through the IEA was a major cause of his rejection.

Gov. Daniel Walker nominated Nagle to fill the vacant board seat about three weeks ago. Nagle testified before the Senate Executive Committee Wednesday night and was rejected there, but not because of his affiliation with Walker, he said.

"They asked me no questions about SIU in particular," he added. "Several Republican committee members said they didn't like the organizations I belong to."

Out of the 45 minutes of his testimony, Nagle said about 30 minutes was spent on his opinions about collective bargaining. Another 10 minutes was spent on his membership in the ACLU, he said.

The IEA has supported collective bargaining for some time, and Nagle is president of his local chapter. Aided if he would vote for collective bargaining if the question came before the SIU Board of Trustees, Nagle said, "Probably so."

"But I'm only one member," he pointed out. "Maybe one or two others would vote for it, but I don't know."

"It certainly wasn't my intention to organize people in support of collective bargaining," he said. "I just wanted to serve as a citizen on the board."

Undisclosed source of funds possible for Saluki Stables, student announces

By David C. Miller Jr.
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

A "very, very possible" new source of funds for Saluki Stables was announced late Thursday, following the administration's deferment until December of the decision on whether to close the facility.

"We might be able to get a lot of money," said Rick Pere, chairman of the Student Senate as hoc committee studying means of financing the deficit-ridden stables. Pere would not identify the potential source, explaining it was "not sure at all" yet.

Pere said a formal proposal was in the making, and would be forwarded to the administration. He said the money would probably only meet the short-term funding needs of the stables, while long-term measures continue to be sought.

Earlier Thursday, Daniel Orescanin, executive vice president, said the closing decision would be held until "around the first of December."

"At this point, another week or two won't matter in the decision, Orescanin said. He said he would receive the committee's report on funding suggestions Friday.

The report, completed before the last-minute source of funds appeared Thursday, considered and rejected a number of possible funding solutions for the stables. The only meaningful answer, the report said, would be to incorporate the stables into the College of Education and establish a two- or four-year degree program in equestrianism.

Orescanin had not seen the report Thursday, but his offhand reaction to the solution was skeptical. The problem, he said, would be with requesting additional funding, and he said he was not Board of Trustees or the state would react to such a plan.

Aside from SIU's troubled budget, Orescanin said, it is "always possible" for equestrian degree funds to come from a special state allotment. But

"magic money" will not suddenly appear, he said, and since the Illinois Board of Higher Education views education spending in terms of total amounts, the extra SIU program would eventually mean reduction of an existing program or fund.

The problem for the stables, once past the deficit and immediate maintenance costs, is to find long-term funding for its operation. Pere welcomed the hold on the closing decision, and said other revenues will be sought in the next few weeks.

Pere mentioned contacting horse and harness racing associations and the state government for long-term monies for the stables.

"It's all tentative," he said, "but we're thinking of asking for subsidies." Pere did not know yet whether the subsidies would be possible for long-term support, and he said he was unsure if the monies would be used to start the equestrian degree program.

Conference stresses correctional training

By Gary Houy
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The first state-wide conference on methods of preparing teachers and officials to work effectively in corrections institutions emphasized the need for both technical and environmental training for corrections workers.

Sixty corrections officials from outside the University gathered with 20 SIU participants for the conference held in the Student Center Thursday.

The conference was a cooperative effort of four university groups and three governmental agencies. The SIU groups are the Department of Occupational Education; the Rehabilitation Institute; the Center for the Study of Crime, Delinquency and Corrections; and the School of Technical Careers.

The state agencies are the Division of Vocational Technical Education, the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation and the Department of Corrections.

J. Clark Esarey, superintendent of the Illinois Department of Corrections School District, said his department is working closely with the Division of Vocational Technical Education in career and occupational programs for people in corrections institutions.

"We are concerned with staff qualifications," Esarey said. "They should require some kind of certification so we know they have some knowledge of the correctional environment."

The corrections department program is working directly with the prison industry to train inmates in jobs such as welding and sheet metal work to prepare them for integration with society, Esarey said.

"It is my opinion that if inmate training is made available in the absence of the training of corrections staffs, we might be wasting our time," Esarey said.

Ray Quick, administrator of education in the juvenile division of the Illinois Department of Corrections said the philosophy of his division is to meet the student's needs on their level.

"We only give passing and incomplete grades to students," Quick said. "We don't think there should be room for failure in correctional institutions."

There are 10 to 15 students in the average class in a state correctional school, but there are attendance problems. The students who work give priority to their job over their classes, and a day shift runs at the same time as most classes.

"We haven't been putting education as the priority and we probably should be," Quick said.

Quick said that most public schools are glad to get rid of the students that wind up in correctional schools. "They consider them troublemakers," he said. "And 70 per cent of those in our schools come from Chicago public schools."

"The challenges are great and the rewards can be great in correctional work," Quick said. "The reward is helping kids in trouble who need a lot of help."

Three assumptions underlying the training and education of offenders were offered by Edmund Muth, deputy director of the Illinois Law Enforcement Commission's Correctional Manpower Services Program.

The first assumption is that inadequate access to jobs and activities results in a high level of frustration in the offender. Second, by increasing access to jobs and activities, corrections workers can decrease the offender's tendency to relapse into criminal behavior. Finally, this accessibility can be enhanced by providing offenders with job training.

Muth said the Illinois program is one of eight national Comprehensive Official Manpower Programs (COMP). "It was an isolated, vocational program in the 60's which is not very effective," he said.

The federal government then decided to put $10 million into the first year of the COMP, allocating $2 million for Illinois. This money is used for "plugging gaps" between correctional service areas for a more effective vocational program, Muth said.

"We try to work out a vocational area early in the offender's stay in a penitentiary, make sure the use of resources is available to him and try to have a reasonably salable product in the end," Muth said.

Three major subsystems to the correctional education system were defined by Muth. One is the manpower subsystem, involving the inmate's career awareness, academic education, vocational counsel and job preparation.

The second is the business-community subsystem. This involves getting information on the labor market for ex-offenders and achieving accreditation of the institution in the business community.

The third subsystem is the correctional area, where the problems of the offenders must be reasonably solved. If there is a relapse in behavior, the previous training of the offender is useless, Muth said.

Struggle for control of energy policy seen within administration

By R. Gregory Nokes
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz disclosed strong objections to gasoline rationing, he also exposed some of the administration power struggles over energy policy.

He said some people were over-reacting to the energy crisis and that if Americans acted intelligently they could avoid gasoline rationing.

Treasury sources said Shultz was concerned that some administration officials were making the shortage seem more serious than it is and were getting carried away with the idea of gasoline rationing without giving adequate consideration to other alternatives.

But his statement conflicted with Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton and White House energy adviser John Love, who were saying rationing was almost a certainty by the beginning of 1974.

"His (Shultz) statement came as a real surprise," said one Treasury source. "That alone will put rationing back until spring at the earliest if it is needed at all."

There has been considerable struggling within the administration over who is going to run the energy program and how. The principals are Morton, Love and Deputy Treasury Secretary William E. Simon.

Shultz said Tuesday he favors price increases as the classic solution to controlling demands for gasoline, with rationing to be used only as "an absolute last resort."

Proposals are being developed within the Treasury for a 30-cent increase in the federal tax on gasoline, which would boost prices per gallon to about the 75-to 80-cent level, depending on the grade of gasoline.

Consideration is being given to reducing taxes in other areas, such as for telephone service, so that there will be a trade-off of the tax burden.

There might also be provision for exemptions or tax refunds for persons for whom gasoline is essential in their work, such as taxi drivers.

Treasury economists also are giving study to various rationing proposals, as are analysts from other agencies, but none of these plans has reached the upper echelons of the administration where the decisions will be made.

The Treasury Department recommended a 10-cent tax increase on gasoline last summer, but it was rejected by the White House. Simon's office also pushed hard for a mandatory allocation program for crude oil last summer, but that died on Love's desk.

Shultz said: "I'm one of those who long sought to convince people that we have a major energy problem. It's been hard to wake people up to it."

But now, he complained, people are over-reacting and "scared out of their wits," and strongly indicated he felt the support by other administration spokesmen for gasoline rationing was an example of this.

Chairman Herbert F. Stein of the Council of Economic Advisers followed a day later by saying he thought the administration would opt for tax increases on gasoline, rather than rationing.

The hostility at Treasury toward Love stems from a feeling there that he was slow to act on the energy problem.

Morton is regarded by these same sources as a newcomer to the problem who is seeking to administer the program.

The same criticism has been leveled at Simon's office in Treasury.

If there is gasoline rationing, a large new bureaucracy would be needed and someone to run it and this logically would fall under Interior's new Office of Petroleum Allocation, already set up to administer the mandatory allocation programs for heating oil, jet fuel and kerosene.

Community involvement needed for institutions

By Sam Denoms
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The need for community involvement in correctional institutions and more programs involving counseling, training and educational opportunities were emphasized Thursday during the final session of the Fourth Annual Institute of Law, Psychiatry and the Mentally Disordered Offender.

A last minute change in the program brought John J. Twomey, former warden of Joliet-Stateville Penitentiary, in as replacement speaker for Peter B. Bensinger, executive director of the Chicago Crime Commission. Twomey spoke on "They Call it Justice."

Twomey underlined his talk with remarks about the successes of the Illinois Department of Corrections during the time when Bensinger was director of the department.

Twomey said the accomplishments seen by the department during 1971 included the completion of comprehensive legislation which provided greater flexibility in the design and administration of treatment programs in the institutions and established the legal machinery by which the department was able to work more closely with other State agencies having correctional jurisdictions.

Twomey noted that the court systems in America do not demonstrate the so-called ideals of "justice for all" based on our Constitution's assertion that "all men are created equal."

"It is difficult to see justice in the fact that nearly 75 per cent of the men incarcerated in Illinois' correctional institutions are black and from the Chicago area, of which a majority of them come from a central location within the city itself," Twomey said.

"In the name of 'justice' laws were changed involving drug offenses and offenders, but only after white middle-class children and not just blacks started getting arrested for drug abuse," Twomey told his audience.

In response to a question on capital punishment, Twomey explained how some of his experiences while working in corrections and various events have influenced his feelings on the subject.

"I can't honestly say I am for or against it. I have very mixed emotions about capital punishment," he said.

After the session Twomey told a Missouri Correctional administrator, "We haven't had much experience with capital punishment in the last 25 years. I feel there's no point in having a law you can't enforce, and there's no point in having a penalty you don't use."

Blonds popular way back

NEW YORK (AP)—Apparently, ancient Romans thought blonds had more fun. Blond wigs imported from the hair of German captives were common, says the World Book Encyclopedia.

Roman women also dyed their hair as part of their routine, and some went so far as to sprinkle their locks with gold dust in their efforts to disarm a Centurion or two.

Women are still sprinkling "gold dust" in their hair, World Book notes. Today, an estimated $3.5 billion a year is spent in more than 180,000 beauty shops in the United States alone.

James Nagle not confirmed for SIU Board

mittee's rejection of Nagle, Walker said similar Senate action would be "a slap in the face to all teachers in Illinois."

Walker charged Senate Republicans with saying "no" to women in government, "no" to Latin Americans." Nagle was the eighth Walker nominee turned down by the committee.

Nagle spent a weekend at SIU meeting with administrators and board members and students to learn about the university. He sat in on the November board meeting and studied the budget before the meeting.

He said he was "well-prepared" to talk to the committee about SIU.

"I thought I was going there for purposes of qualifying myself for the post," Nagle said. "It became clear immediately that that wasn't the issue."

He said members questioned him about collective bargaining, the ACLU, the right to strike, what kind of medication he takes for his diabetes and his favorite poets (he is a poetry teacher). Nagle termed the questioning "disappointing."

"I think the board of any university ought to be made up of representatives of all areas," he added. "It should be balanced board. There are more ways to achieve balance than me, but because I think I am qualified, the failure to confirm my appointment is unfortunate."

Immediately after Nagle's rejection, the Illinois Senate approved the appointment of Felicita Berlanga, 21, to the Board of Governors of Colleges and Universities. A junior at the Illinois State University, Berlanga is the first full-fledged voting member of a university board.

Berlanga's appointment had been highly contested by Senate Republicans.

Commissioner Nuckles to 'ignore' petition deadline set by S-Senate

By Debby Ratemann

Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Election Commissioner Steve Nuckles said he "will ignore" the unanimous decision of the Student Senate Wednesday night to move the Student Senate petition deadline from Friday to Tuesday.

"The deadline for senate petitions is 5 p.m. Friday," Nuckles said. "The date was set a long time ago and I have no intention of changing it."

Senator Garry Seltzer moved that the deadline be extended four days "because no one knows the boundaries of eastside dorm and non-dorm districts. This is reprehensible and unfair. Candidates have no idea whether their petitions will be valid for the district they are running in."

Nuckles, who was not at the senate meeting, denied Seltzer's charge Thursday and said, "There shouldn't be any

Ford denies charges of deals made to help impeach Douglas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President-designate Gerald R. Ford testified Thursday that he and two other congressmen did not offer to help millionaire Louis Wolfson with his legal problems if he would help their effort to impeach Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas.

Ford testified at his House confirmation hearing that a lawyer working for the congressmen, Benton L. Becker, offered on his own to help Wolfson, but the congressmen did not.

"We never offered any such action," Ford testified under oath.

The issue was raised by Rep. Jerome R. Waldie, D-Calif., who read a file of letters on the offer.

Waldie told newsmen outside the House Judiciary Committee hearing, "The inference is that Becker offered the influence of the congressmen he represented."

In a letter dated Sept. 3, 1970, Becker told Wolfson's lawyer, William O. Bittman, that Ford and the other two congressmen were looking into Justice Douglas' dealings with Albert Parvin. Becker said it was believed that a conversation with Wolfson "could shed light upon the inner workings of the Parvin Dohrman Co."

Becker concluded the letter by saying, "I am personally sympathetic to your client's present plight and would be anxious to assist him in any way available to me."

Waldie then put on the record a letter from Bittman to his client Wolfson saying that if he cooperated in their Douglas inquiry "the congressmen he represented probably could be of some assistance to you in connection with your second case."

Waldie told newsmen later he did not know what Wolfson's second case was except that it was connected with Wolfson's conviction in a stock fraud case.

Wolfson was convicted in 1967 of selling $2.7 million worth of unregistered stock and was convicted in 1968 of obstruction of justice.

But Ford told the confirmation committee that it was clear from Becker's letter that he was making the offer of help for Wolfson on his own and that that offer "became enlarged in Bittman's mind."

to Tel Aviv, declared: "At last we have arranged things by talks, like human beings, instead of by tank fire and exploding grenades."

The first Red Cross planes carried wounded prisoners, some walking and some on stretchers. The International Red Cross said it expected the full exchange to take about a week.

In Cairo informants reported a major shakeup in the Egyptian military high command following Israel's lightning break through Egypt's Suez line in the last 10 days of the October war.

They said the military calamity, which left the Egyptian 3rd Army cut off in the Sinai Desert, had resulted in the firing of at least one army chief and creation of a new field command. Observers foresaw the possibility of court-martial trials in the wake of the failure to follow up an initial Egyptian success.

The wrangling in Cairo, hidden from the public and officially unconfirmed, is an Egyptian counterpart to complaints in Israel that the Israeli armed forces were unprepared for the Oct. 6 attack that opened the war.

As part of the POW exchange Israel agreed to turn over to U.N. forces its control of the highway from Cairo to Suez. This gives Egypt access to the city of Suez and the isolated 3rd Army without going through Israeli controls for the first time since final states of the October war.

The deal, worked out by Egyptian and Israeli generals under the agreement sponsored by U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, firmed the cease-fire on the Suez front.

But on the Syrian front, Damascus reported an artillery duel in the Golan Heights, the fifth truce breakdown in 10 days. The Damascus communique did not say how long the exchange of fire lasted.

A prisoner exchange has not been worked out with Syria.

In its latest POW count, Israeli said it will be returning 8,221 men to Egypt. The Egyptians list 238 Israelis captured in the war, plus nine captured in military operations before 1970.

The figures leave unaccounted for the remainder of the 350 troops Israeli had previously estimated to have been captured by the Egyptians.

Health Department asks for school cooperation

By John Morrissey

Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Jackson County Public Health Department asked for cooperation with the Carbondale Elementary School Board Thursday in conducting sanitary investigations of Carbondale grade schools.

John Amadio, administrator for the Health Department, related to the Board that Illinois statute grants county health departments no authority to make investigations in school buildings.

He said the health department receives complaints every so often about sanitation in school cafeterias or other areas of a school buildings, "usually second-hand, from parents who get it from students." To this, Amadio told the board, the Health Department has to tell them they have no authority to follow up a complaint.

Seeds of disaster

The recent override of President Nixon's veto on the War Powers Bill by Congress may bring some joy to Nixon's critics, but may prove to be a disaster for American foreign policy at some point in the future.

The bill was designed to prevent the president from committing American armed forces to foreign hostilities without Congressional approval.

We can all sympathize with an Congressional action aimed at preventing future Vietnams, but the War Powers Bill could seriously hinder the flexibility that future presidents may need to maintain an effective foreign policy.

The bill requires that the president notify Congress within 48 hours of committing U. S. troops to a foreign country. The bill further stipulates that these troops must be withdrawn within 60 days (or 90 days if the president certifies that he needs the extra time to allow safe withdrawal of our troops), unless Congress agrees to an extension.

In other words, if at some point in the future the president finds it necessary to send troops to a foreign country, Congress can halt the action by doing nothing. The effect on our foreign policy would be unimaginable.

President Nixon has said that the bill "would give every future Congress the ability to handcuff every future president by doing nothing and sitting still." He added that the bill "seriously undermines this nation's ability to act convincingly and decisively in times of national crisis."

There is a tendency these days on the part of many decent people to take everything the President says and see to it that his advice is disregarded. These people say that President Nixon's recent actions concerning the White House tapes or some other Watergate matter are grounds for rejection of everything he proposes.

These people cannot deny, however, that the President's severely tarnished image at home has not hampered his ability to implement a successful foreign policy. The recent alert of our armed forces and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's talks with leaders in the Middle East have resulted in peace there. We even have the rare occasion of Tass, the Soviet press agency, criticizing the American press and people for being too harsh on President Nixon.

And despite any lingering Congressional resentment over Vietnam, it must be remembered that the original Gulf of Tonkin Resolution in 1964 permitting the president to "take all necessary measures to repel any armed attack against the forces of the United States and to prevent further aggression" was passed by Congress. Also approved were the large military appropriations requested by Presidents Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon. If we are to find guilt in these presidents, we must also find guilt in Congress for approving their programs.

It would be a vast mistake if Congress were to reject all of Nixon's recommendations on foreign policy as a result of Watergate. The President has proved that he can effectively implement our foreign policy despite his domestic problems. If he is allowed to remain in office, he should be able to continue his foreign policy objectives without political interference from Congress.

Ho-Hum

Student Government has had a hard time seating an SIU-Carbondale student on the Board of Trustees. First, there was the referendum to select the method of selecting the trustee. Then, in the space of three days, the Student Senate proposed, abolished and re-instated the qualifications for trustee candidates. By the time this hassle is over, we'll ALL be bored of trustees.

Joe Sikspak demands a scandal

By Arthur Hoppe

The fiendish scheme of the Arab countries to deprive America of its desperately needed oil had a drastic effect on the Nation's culture and economy.

By the spring of 1974, the Government had no choice but to invoke a complete ban on private automobiles.

The cultural shock to the country—long described as "a nation on wheels"—was staggering. Indeed, a few less stable members of the society failed to survive.

"What I can't stand," screamed a distraught housewife, being dragged across New York's deserted Fifth Avenue to an ambulance by sympathetic attendants, "is this deafening silence!"

And in Los Angeles, the mind of 94-year-old Elbert Quimby snapped when the life-long resident of the downtown area looked out his window one morning and for the first time clearly saw the City Hall 14 blocks away.

But despite the absence of horns, shrieking tires, roaring engines and gas fumes, most Americans managed somehow to make do.

In fact in some families the ban created occasional flashes of elation. "Imagine, our son, Irving, has learned to walk!" a proud Mrs. Wilbur Wasp told her bridge club. "And he's only 18."

Thus, soft, flabby Americans had no choice but to walk, roller skate or bicycle to get where they were going. In six months they have lost a gross total of one million tons of total gross flab.

Without smog, their eyes turned white and their lungs clear. Without vinyl roofs overhead, their skins bronzed. Without cars as status symbols, it was difficult to tell rich from poor and a new democratic spirit swept the land. And in the quiet streets, the art of conversation flourished once again.

Parking lots were turned into parks, parking garages into bowling alleys. And by simply adding white lines, fences and nets, the Pasadena Freeway was converted into 21,642 tennis courts—thus assuring local residents an average wait of only 27 minutes in order to play.

Of course, the effects of the ban on the economy were enormous. Detroit converted to bicycle production, but owners of auto repair shops went bankrupt, which won them the sympathy of their immediate families—if no one else.

On the other hand, every former motorist saved a good $100 a month on car upkeep. And the Government saved billions on highway repairs and construction, making for tax cuts.

With this giant leap in personal disposable income, the economy boomed.

So America almost overnight became the land its Founding Fathers had dreamed of—a nation of lean, muscular, alert, clear-eyed, prosperous, democratic citizens.

The lesson wasn't lost on the Masterminds of the Kremlin, no fools they. Following Moscow's 324th Unsurmountable Traffic Jam and 651st Smog Alert, they called in the Arab leaders.

"You want more desperately needed oil?" asked the Arab leaders.

"No," said the Masterminds, "we want you to take what we're getting and sell it to the Americans."

In six months, America returned to normal.

Pappy's apple tree

Great affairs, often, are affected by matters insignificant in themselves. The famous Dutch boy was perhaps on his way to the store when he noticed the leak in the dike. For want of a horseshoe nail a battle was lost. The Hessians at Trenton were groggy from Christmas drinking when the Americans fell on them. And so on.

Mr. Nixon, thinking that posterity would be interested in his every work, had his conversations taped. Of course, even without such a help posterity manages to be well informed about Presidents Washington and Lincoln. About Martin Van Buren and Chester A. Arthur posterity doesn't care that much.

So from a concern for history Mr. Nixon got himself into a dreadful bind.

It reminds one of the old song about Pappy, who was hanged to his own apple tree. In the jingle are the lines:

If Pappy hadda knowed it,
He'd been sorry that he growed it....

Higher education in the process of social change

By David O. Edema

Daily Egyptian Special Writer

Gradually but steadily, American higher education of the 1970's is undergoing a profound change following the turmoil of the 1960's. As relative calm overtakes the campuses across the country, all segments of the university community—students, faculty and administration—are settling down to a new era of understanding innovation that, from all intents and purposes, is likely to be far-reaching and long range. And what is more, society as a whole is already beginning to feel the impact of the change.

One no longer sees or hears of violent student demonstrations, or of kidnappings of faculty members and administration officials as ransoms, or of National Guardsmen advancing on the campuses and very often spraying the whole places with tear gas and sometimes bullets, too. Instead, what one sees are sober students going about their studies and other daily tasks with a seriousness of purpose and dedication that contrasts sharply with those continual class boycotts and disruptions of the 1960's. The once stunned if not helpless faculty members are now dusting up new course proposals that were forced into limbo of the filing cabinets, and are going back to the drawing boards to map out the direction of development in scholarship that they have for long wanted to undertake. Harassed administrators on their own part are picking up the pieces from the debris of the 1960's and settling down again to the difficult but nevertheless rewarding task of guiding the orderly process of the educational enterprise.

Drastic changes in most of the supposedly obvious reasons for students' radicalism and confrontation with the authorities in the 1960's, such as the Vietnam war, the draft, the war-related university research, of course help to account for these developments.

"End of the war and the draft are definitely accountable," says Economics Department Chairman Robert G. Laver. "Most of the students who have made a lot of trouble on campus as in the '60's are now in junior colleges, and some others of their kind are not even in school at all. A large number of these people actually did not need college education, and they enrolled only because they either wanted to avoid the draft or that they were genuinely opposed to the war, which they regarded as 'immoral' and 'unjust'."

As for the breed of students now in university, "they are, I think, more serious with their studies—of course since they no longer have to spend their precious time marching and seizing buildings. They are actually those who really want college education to earn a living. People who realize that no matter how many problems society has, the basic, traditional values of maintaining a family, being a useful member of the community, and so on, are still desirable goals worth aspiring to."

Dr. JoAnne Thorpe, chairman Women's Physical Education, has a different view: "I don't have any evidence that they (students) are paying more attention to their studies. What I would say is that we are now free to devote more time to learning than before, since there are practically no more protests and violent encounters as in the '60's. But to say that students are definitely learning more than before, I would have to have some concrete evidence to demonstrate that, but I don't."

As explained by Professor John E. King, SIU Chairman of Higher Education, "only about 10 to 15 per cent of students actually took part in the demonstrations and riots of the 1960's; and it was unfortunate that because there were so many disturbances on the campuses, people simply assumed that all students were involved."

He does not believe that end of either the war or the draft has much to do with the relative calm on the campuses. Rather, what he attributes the situation to are that "students are horrified by the effects of violence. They are horrified by the degree of inequality, discrimination, corruption, and other major problems we have, and they no longer believe that violence can solve these problems. Calm does not have anything to do with the end of the draft. It does not have anything to do with the number of patrolmen on campus. It does not mean that students are more book-oriented, either. What I know is that they are turning back to a glass of beer; and they are now turning back to more dating, some of those positive activities which contribute to the development of the whole person."

"I would call this period that of a return to 'normalcy'—and it may probably be that students are no longer as excited about campus life as they were during the last decade, but they seem to be more mature and to want to get involved in order to help change other things. Many of them can now use their voices, and some may even initiate court actions in their attempt to help redress some of their inequities." From the look of things, "I do not predict that there will be any other student violence within at least the next five years."

"Students are not a monolithic group," Professor George Mace of the Department of Government states, "and it would not be appropriate to say that one can identify a general student mood at any time. Each person has his or her own individual concerns, even though there are certain issues in which a large number of students are equally involved. Many of them can now vote, and can express their opinions through that process. One of the primary issues today is health, and many students are concerned about it as any other set of people. A lot of the energy expended in riots previously are now being channelled into useful programs of all sorts."

He feels that "the university is the real social system that is more innovative than any other. It's the most friendly system that is very receptive to new ideas, and it's always ready to encourage people with various ideas to espouse them. Most students can and do put this kind of atmosphere to good use by getting involved in things."

One of the most urgent demands of students in the past was that they be allowed to participate in decisions affecting their academic and social lives. Now, many of them are on various academic and other committees of all kinds; and here at SIU, they are in about a dozen university-wide committees and boards, including the University Senate, the Core Recreation and Building Committee, the Student Review Board, the Student Conduct Code Committee, and even the Board of Trustees and the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

Dean of Students Bruce R. Swinburne explains that "there is a lot of maturity in students now, and what they are saying is this: 'Issues can be discussed with those in authority without allowing things to develop into a crisis situation. We know we can do it.' He believes that "they are still concerned about inequities and corruption and inconsistencies in society. But they believe that they can play a constructive role in bringing about the desired change."

He says SIU has done a great deal to give representation to students, "but much more still need to be done. I believe that the greatness of an institution is directly related to the degree of inclusiveness of the institution."

There is another issue which many people believe plays an important role in the current changed atmosphere. Severe budget cutbacks have resulted in the departure of many people on academic and administrative jobs, while a number of others' contracts have not been renewed. The immediate impact is that faculty members now faced with job insecurity are less likely to encourage, or at least condone, student activism as some did in the past, but rather are playing it safe in order to keep their jobs. All of these exert a demoralizing effect on the staff, and students are invariably affected.

Inflation, reduced Federal aid, and other financial problems, combine with lower budgets to bring about the much talked-about enrollment decline in colleges and universities all over the country. Actually, there is no absolute decline as such, but rather a decrease in the percentage of high school graduates that are entering colleges and universities. For example, the percentage of college-bound high school graduates has dropped about 4 percentage points in the last few years—more than 70 per cent of this drop accounted for by male graduates. Dr. King concurs by saying that while there were roughly 9.0 million students in institutions of higher learning 1971, there were 9.2 million in 1972, and 9.4 million are currently enrolled.

Ultimately, the impact of all these developments on higher education is bound to be crucial. Several signs of this are already manifest in the kinds of courses now being developed, which are instrumental or problems oriented rather than the usual, traditional ones that are merely theoretical.

The change is taking place at a time when most academics are seen as becoming more radicalized as professorial unionization and protests against tenureless contracts gear up. What the "new scholars" are saying in essence is that scholarship can still be as theoretical as it wishes without ignoring the pressing issues of the times that cry out for solution, and that look up to academe for leadership in the process.

The Chronicle of Higher Education recently carried a lengthy article titled "The 'New' Scholar: A Special Report," which recounted how professors across the country are embracing such mind expanding concepts as the "New Criticism," the "New Scholarship," and the "New Social Relations." These could, for example, range from such a home-grown course title as "Representations of Violence" at the Buffalo campus of the State University of New York to an entire university without any established courses of instruction, such as the Cornell College of Mount Vernon in Iowa.

Brandeis University's "radical historian" James R. Green aptly depicts the "new scholar" and the nature of his educational innovations when he says:

"Clearly radicals in the universities have to be both intellectuals and activists, but writing good Marxist scholarship and teaching courses which encourage critical perspective on capitalist society and develop capitalistic categories of analysis may be more important forms of activism for them than agitating at professional association meetings or doing community organizing....We are beginning to spread some critical ideas. Some of them are filtering into teaching, others into community organizing. But we don't expect every pamphlet or conference to cause a revolution."

In practically all of the established disciplines, young, activist professors, or even moderate to not-too-conservative oldies who see no contradiction in synthesizing traditionalism with pragmatism, are exerting an enormous pressure on the university curricula for a rapid change. In economics, for instance, there have since the mid-1960's been two distinct "schools of thought" working at virtually opposite poles. The "Theory-and-Mathematics-Oriented School" believes that spinning out more and more theories with mathematical elegance is what the discipline needs. The "Practical School" disagrees, and insists that solution of social problems cannot be achieved by piling up abstract theories but by utilizing already existing theories to deal with everyday needs of man in the post-industrial society. The "Practical School" formed "The Union for Radical Political Economics (URPE) in September 1968 to 'bring together people who see the need for a drastic re-examination of the role of the economist in our society'."

One of its pamphlets explains that "common dissatisfactions with the economics taught and practiced in this country led to the formation of URPE as an organization. For some of us, although the tools of formal economics appear to have their uses, the basic questions of neoclassical economics appear wrong. They take for given in the parameters the very institutions of society which we are challenging. The American celebration implicit in the notion of a 'grand neoclassical synthesis' seems to us a cruel sham. Some members of URPE furthermore consider that traditional economics is not merely limited in its uses than most curricula imply: it may be a distinct social evil, in that it trains students to avoid the larger questions relating to capitalist institutions and modes of decision making, and inhibits the challenging of these institutions and their operations."

Under the direction of Professor Robert Laver, who regards himself as "leaning toward the Practical School," SIU's Economics Department is introducing many innovative courses beginning with proposed semester system, such as "Economics of Human Resources," "Contemporary Economic Problems," "Economics of the Environment," and "Economics of Antitrust." There are similar developments in many other departments—"Energy and The Future" in Physics and Astronomy and "The Law and Politics of Watergate" in Government, for example, all scheduled for the next quarter.

These are but a few of the latest developments at SIU. Dean of Students Swinburne says it is time for higher education to get at grips with the pace of social development. "I believe in quality and relevance in higher education," he states, "and I eagerly look forward to a Time when there will be an end to barriers to admission and financing of higher education, when there will be open admission, when there will be far-reaching developments in curricula, and when there will be more and better remedial and other supportive programs for all those who need them." He says SIU is seriously considering a plan that would allow students to learn at their own speeds. "We all know that students learn at different rates of speed," Dean Swinburne says, "and it is increasingly becoming unrealistic to expect everyone to learn at his or her best within one specified period of time."

Already, higher education has begun to be "taken to the people." Open admission that is gradually taking hold in some places is one. The British-type "University of the Air" that is being experimented on in various schools is another. The home study, correspondence-type variety is yet another. And College Courses by newspaper of the "America and the Future of Man" program being undertaken by some 155 colleges and universities in the country is latest on the list. Perhaps, all of these will eventually culminate in that "New Society" that everyone seems to be longing for.

President pushes counter-attack

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon pushed his Watergate counter-attack in public and private Thursday and drew standing cheers from his largest audience in three months when he vowed anew to remain in office.

Before an overflow crowd of several thousand at the National Association of Realtors convention, Nixon accentuated the happy developments of the year, from his standpoint, and soft-pedaled discussion of the Watergate scandals, which he referred to as "the problem of the campaign of 1972."

Nixon discribed his election victory last year as a mandate to end the Vietnam war, pursue a permanent peace, build a safe and beautiful country and achieve "a new prosperity without war and without unacceptable inflation."

"I am not going to walk away until I get that job done," he said. The President appeared before the realtors between a marathon series of private huddles with members of Congress, most of them Republicans.

At these week-long sessions, most participants from Congress have emerged to report Nixon is determined to make a full disclosure in meeting head-on Watergate-related accusations aimed at him and his administration.

Following Nixon's breakfast meeting Thursday with 78 House Republicans, however, Rep. Paul McCloskey of California told reporters: "I don't think any of us learned anything new... It's going to be a continuing battle to get the truth."

McCloskey, who challenged Nixon for the 1972 GOP presidential nomination as an opponent of the Vietnam war, said the President referred to his decision to make available selected tapes of conversations "as a one-shot thing," and added, "I think the President still does not realize that there's duty on his part to make a full disclosure."

Deputy White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren, asked if Nixon planned to place limitations on the materials he will make available to the special Watergate prosecutor, said the President will cooperate to the fullest extent but retains a firmly held conviction that he must defend the principle of presidential confidentiality.

Asked if this meant Nixon would decide on a case-by-case basis whether to surrender tapes or documents sought by the prosecutor, Warren said, "I would hesitate to limit the President's options."

finale, considered Mozart's greatest single operatic section.

David Burleson is both conductor and pianist for the confrontation of Violetta (JoAnn Hawkins) and her lover Alfredo (Steve Drakulich) with Alfredo's father (Alex Montgomery) in a scene from Verdi's "La Traviata."

Kathleen Tate of Carbondale is musical director and pianist for Bucci's folk-song opera, "Sweet Betsy from Pike," with Deanna DuComb as Betsy and Tom Shepard as her not-too-bright lover. Cynthia Rose of Harrisburg is narrator, Victoria Mies is choreographer.

Rape reported by SIU coed

A 20-year-old SIU coed told University police that a man accosted her outside her apartment Wednesday night, forced her inside, and blindfolded and raped her.

The woman said the incident began at 11:45 p.m. as she returned to her apartment on south Graham after going out to eat.

As she put her key into the lock, the man grabbed her from behind, placing one hand over her mouth and something sharp against her throat, she told police.

She said she never saw the man's face because he immediately blindfolded her. Threatening to kill her if she struggled, he undressed and raped her, then tied her hands behind her before he left, she told police.

Police said the woman described her attacker as white with a medium build, about 5-foot-6 to 5-foot-8 and wearing a plaid jacket and beige pants.

Alcohol on campus okay at 5 Illinois schools

CHICAGO (AP)—The Board of Governors of State Colleges and Universities is permitting students of lawful age at its five member institutions to possess and consume alcoholic beverages in limited campus areas.

The policy, adopted at the board's

Group proposes limits regarding on-campus ads

A proposal to control advertising on campus headed the agenda of the Student Environmental Center (SEC) meeting Tuesday night.

The proposal, which will be presented to the Student Senate for ratification, is an effort to enforce cleanup operations of groups that advertise on campus, according to Jeff Kolp, president of the SEC.

Included in the bill are regulations pertaining to the removing of all posters, handbills, and leaflets from campus buildings after a certain time period, to be set by the center, Kolp explained.

If an organization did not comply with the regulations, it would have its campus advertising rights revoked, Kolp said. "No advertising may be placed on animate objects such as trees, or in a place that will obstruct the view," he added.

Old sources to new energy

Scientists, hunting for an answer to the energy crisis, are checking out old forms of power, like harnessing the sun, the earth's own heat, the winds and the tides, and even burning trash.

November meeting Thursday, is effective immediately.

Institutions under the board's jurisdiction are Eastern Illinois University at Charleston; Governor State University at Park Forest South; Northeastern Illinois University in Chicago; Western Illinois University in Macomb and Chicago State University.

The policy statement declared alcoholic beverages may be possessed and consumed in dormitories, in married students living quarters, in overnight university union facilities, and in such other areas and facilities as may be designated by the individual universities. The vote for adoption of the policy was 5 in favor, 3 opposed and 1 abstention.

The board policy is subject, the board said, to reasonable rules and regulations as promulgated by the universities.

Institutional regulations must conform to the recent legislation which permits 19-year-olds and 20-year-olds to drink beer and wine only.

The sale and commercial delivery of alcoholic beverages on campuses still is prohibited, said the board.

"No moral decision is involved and this action does not express approval of alcoholic beverages," Dr. Ben L. Morton, executive officer and secretary of the board, said.

"The board will periodically review the effect of allowing consumption on campuses to insure that educational functions of its institutions are not disrupted," he added.

Largest complex for pork planned

HANNIBAL, Mo. (AP)—The Hannibal Courier-Post said Thursday it learned steps are being taken toward creation of a northeast Missouri complex which would raise, slaughter, process and market one million hogs a year.

A dozen people interviewed by the newspaper said it was a revolutionary concept which would be the largest pork producer in the world and could have a major impact on the Midwest meat and grain industries.

It would involve 5,000 acres in the vicinity of Kahoka, Mo., where Missouri intersects with Iowa and Illinois.

The Courier-Post identified the key figures as Charles McQuoid of Chicago. It said some of those involved in the planning were the Exchange Bank of Kahoka; Swift and Co. of Chicago and its Globe Engineering Corp.; Ralston Purina Corp. of St. Louis; and researchers at the University of Missouri's college of agriculture.

James Kennel, county farm extension agent at Kahoka, told the Courier-Post: "They still are drilling for water and taking out land options. I think they eventually are planning on about 5,000 acres. This would have a nationwide effect on the pork industry. It definitely would have an effect on the feed grain market."

Paul Martin, vice president of the bank at Kahoka, said:

"At this point we are not releasing any facts or figures. Any information we would give now would be a little premature because some very important things will come together in the next two weeks. Then we can start talking about facts and figures."

Seats still available for holiday flights

NEW YORK (AP)—Flight cutbacks and a major strike are likely to make air travel more inconvenient this Thanksgiving and Christmas, but major airlines say they expect to get all their customers where they want to go for the holidays.

"The air carriers will be able to accommodate all holiday travelers, but maybe not in the manner they would like," said a spokesman for the Civil Aeronautics Board.

"It's going to be more difficult to get a nonstop flight this year, and people may have to take connecting flights and be flexible about when they want to fly."

Because of the energy squeeze, airlines have been cutting back on flights to stay within their fuel allotments.

Further pressure on the airline system is coming from the flight attendants' strike at Trans World Airlines which has shut down the nation's second-largest carrier since Nov. 5.

Eastern Air Lines is making flight cutbacks in the early part of November, when traffic is light, so there will be enough fuel to accommodate traffic during the peak Thanksgiving period, a spokesman said.

"As of now, we have been able to accommodate everybody who has had a flight canceled in November," an Eastern spokesman said. December cutbacks have not yet been announced, but they may be more drastic, he said.

"Bookings are running heavy for the Thanksgiving period and we will not be able to add as many special flights this year as in the past for Christmas and Thanksgiving," said a spokesman for Braniff Airways. "But we still feel we will be able to accommodate everyone."

Two lunch groups 'remember when'

"Remember when or what ever happened to...?"

That was the theme for a get-together of two luncheon clubs of SIU women employees.

The Lunch Bunch, organized in 1967, invited the Meet and Eat group, a new outfit, at a luncheon at the Student Center recently.

Invitations to the affair suggested "Come and share one of your Remember Whens or What Ever Happened To...by bringing the object or telling something that you remember from you know when..."

Some of the "What ever happened to" suggestions listed on the invitation: Oilcloth on the kitchen table...zoot suits...Rosie the Riveter...running boards...milk with cream on the top...eating something without knowing how many calories it had or caring, or even knowing what a calorie was."

I.P.I.R.G. PRESCRIPTION DRUG SURVEY

This survey was conducted by the Illinois Public Interest Research Group (I.P.I.R.G.) from October 5 through November 10, 1973 as a service to the people in the Carbondale area.

The information was secured in two ways. In the case of the first seven drugs, prescription orders were presented to pharmacists for price quotations. The remaining eighteen drug prices were requested on August 7, 1973 during a preliminary survey, but were not disclosed by ten of the eleven pharmacies until October 6, 1973. Disclosure followed an Internal Revenue Service field investigation and directive recommending the violating pharmacies comply to the I.P.I.R.G. request of August 7, 1973.

The Lowest Price for each item is shown in green.

Exam requirements relaxed for social welfare graduates

Persons who receive degrees in social welfare from SIU can now use the degree to meet eligibility requirements for taking a second-level civil service examination in Illinois.

The action was announced by the Illinois Department of Personnel and took effect Wednesday. It waives a requirement for one year of full-time work in social welfare.

The action makes social welfare graduates eligible to take the Social Worker I exam offered by the Illinois Civil Service System.

The social welfare degree now is recognized as equal to one year of graduate work or one year of full-time social work experience, said A. J. Auerbach, director of the social welfare program at SIU.

Auerbach said that in the past, before a person could take the second-level exam he had to have a bachelor's degree plus one year of full-time work in social services.

Illinois is the 26th state to recognize the degree as equal to one year of work experience, he said.

Auerbach said the action was based on a meeting held last spring in Springfield between representatives of the state and faculty members of both campuses of SIU, University of Illinois, Urbana and other Illinois universities.

He said that at the meeting the groups approved recognizing the degree as "worthy of extra consideration for state social service employment."

Auerbach said the decision is significant because it eases eligibility for taking the civil service exam for qualifying for social welfare work with the state government.

The action is a move to recognition of the work done by university students in social welfare classes. The social welfare program at SIU-C included two quarters of field-work practice for the 400 students enrolled, Auerbach said.

Hillel House members attend women's meeting

Four female members of Hillel House attended a conference for Jewish women held Nov. 2 through 4 in Elkhart, Wis. The conference dealt with freeing Jewish women from the traditional roles called for by Orthodox Judaism.

The conference was sponsored by the Jewish Federation in Chicago and attracted 80 participants from the mid-west. Discussions and four workshops were held during the 3-day conference.

Workshops dealt with Jewish family laws, non-sexist Jewish education, rape and self-defense and the women's role in the synagogue.

Laura Brown, Charkl Dunn, Jessie Feirman and Nechana Liss Levinson attended the conference. Ms. Liss-Levinson lead a discussion on abortion and birth control.

Ms. Dunn, said the purpose of the conference was to work at breaking down the specific roles for women in Orthodox Judaism. The women are trying to change the traditional roles for women by changing the habits of Jewish persons, Ms. Dunn said.

MED SCHOOL ADMISSION PROBLEMS?

EuroMed may offer RX via overseas training

For the session starting Fall, 1974,
the European Medical Students Placement Service, Inc. will assist qualified American students in gaining admission to recognized overseas medical schools.

And that's just the beginning.

Since the language barrier constitutes the preponderate difficulty in succeeding at a foreign school, the EuroMed program also includes an intensive 12 week medical and conversational language course, mandatory for all students. Five hours daily, the course is given in the country where the student will attend medical school.

In addition, the European Medical Students Placement Service provides students with a 12 week intensive cultural orientation course, with American students now studying medicine in that particular country serving as counselors.

Senior or graduate students currently enrolled in an American university are

'State' reveals a complex kind of love

By Dave Stearns
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

As Ethel Merman once sang, "They say that falling in love is wonderful...so they tell me."

But "Lying in State," which plays through Monday at the Lab Theater, tells it differently. Showing love as something far more complex than Ms. Merman's cotton candy version, this play shows homosexuals in various stages of liberation, which in this case, means self-acceptance. And this lack of self-acceptance—stemming from prejudice by heterosexuals—is closely examined in this incisive play.

At times, "Lying in State" seems rather overloaded with stories of mental and physical brutality and ostracism by heterosexuals. Perhaps the play's author, Lane Bateman, was trying too hard to compress his view of homosexuals in a straight society.

A Review

"Lying in State" is the story of a male homosexual love affair that falters because the breadwinner of the couple, Eric, needs to run the relationship by heterosexual guidelines—namely sexual fidelity.

Eric and Paul are seduced by a young gay-lib pretty boy, and confide in their lesbian friends who live next door, Rae and Chloe. Eventually, the characters realize that they must be true to themselves, and live their lives day to day with no long-term contracts.

Cynthia Schramm as the fuzzy-haired Rae, hilariously stole every scene she was in. She speaks in roughly 100 different voices, including W.C. Fields, Greta Garbo, Baby Snooks and the Wicked Witch of the West. Although she was able to change her lines with outrageously funny inflections, she was also very touching in the more serious scenes.

Also funny was Chloe's mother,

Justine (Katie Hollis), who was the ultimate middle-aged divorcee, right down to her bleached blonde hair and her oversized sunglasses. Her part functioned to reveal the common misconceptions of gay people.

Once Justine discovers her own daughter, Chloe, is a lesbian, a most touching scene followed in which both Ms. Hollis and Ms. Schramm made believable and well-controlled transitions to the more serious sides of their characters. And Bateman's dialogue in this scene was among the best in the play.

J. Alfred Rodriguez as Paul had large monologues and several emotional scenes to deal with. But his easygoing, childlike characterization with skillful line inflections kept his role from being preachy.

Clearly defined characters were also created by Paul Klapper, as the troubled, chauvinistic Eric; Vaughn Filwett as the Texan sissy-hater; and Lynn Myers as the gentle Chloe. Terrance Thomas was adequate as the decorative Alan.

There were times when "Lying in State" seemed like a television soap opera spliced into a situation comedy. But the homosexual context filled these situations with a deep social significance and depicted these gays as everyday people bewildered by their surroundings.

"Lying in State" has a hell of a lot to say, and says it eloquently and easily in a highly entertaining framework.

And don't fret about the nude seduction scene. It is tastefully and cleverly handled by director Phyllis Wagner.

Friday and Saturday night's performances of "Lying in State" are sold out, as were the Wednesday and Thursday shows. Tickets are available for the Sunday and Monday performances at the Communications box office.

Bus shelter prototype nears completion date

Golconda Training Corps members have "nearly completed" their first bus shelter unit, Burton Bond of the School of Technical Careers said Thursday.

visit next week

Two professors from Winston-Salem State University will be consultants at SIU Monday and Tuesday, Elmer J. Clark, dean of the SIU College of Education, announced.

Faustina L. Holman of the Winston-Salem music department will confer with the School of Music personnel and Meada G. Shipman of the business faculty will have sessions with the College of Business and Administration faculty.

Harves Rahe of the department Department of Secretarial and Business Education and Eliza Daugherty and Catherine McHugh, music educator, will host the visitors. Dean Clark will entertain the consultants and invited guests at a dinner Monday night at the Student Center.

SIU and Winston-Salem are cooperating in a long-range educational program which involves exchange of both students and faculty, Clark said.

on pickup sites along elementary school bus routes. At their last meeting two weeks ago, the Board said it would delay accepting ownership of the structures until it could see an actual prototype.

To publicize his project, Bond said he was planning to take photos of the first unit as it nears completion. "I hope to get shots of some of the young people working on it," he said.

Bond also said he hopes to put the unit "in front of one of the school buildings where it will have great visibility," at Brush School for example. He said he would contact Laurence W. Martin, Carbondale elementary school superintendent, on Friday for permission.

Famed lawyer of author talks on censorship

By Julie Titone
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Chicago attorney Elmer Gertz spoke out strongly in the defense of literary freedom in his talk Wednesday evening at Morris Library Auditorium.

Gertz, whose visit to SIU was sponsored by the Department of English, the School of Law and the Friends of Morris Library, has represented such men as Jack Ruby, Nathan Leopold and Henry Miller in court.

"Everyone is in favor of freedom if he doesn't have to do anything about it," Gertz said. "That's sort of a platonic love, and in this area (freedom of expression), you have to be a fighter."

Gertz emphasized that the Supreme Court's June obscenity ruling has renewed the battle for freedom of literary expression in the United States. The court's refusal to review even the "most outrageous" community bans on literature has plunged creative freedom to its lowest level ever, he said.

Gertz noted that in his celebrated defense of Henry Miller's book "Tropic of Cancer," only one of the police chiefs who had banned the book in the Chicago area had read more than one paragraph in it.

"Every human being whose education has been neglected seems to think that he has the right to instruct others on reading matter," Gertz said.

The Supreme Court is influenced by public opinion, Gertz maintained. Alluding to the uncovering of the Watergate scandal, he said that freedom of the press has kept this country from becoming a police state.

The veteran of many obscenity court battles said that he is optimistic that the Supreme Court will eventually change from its decision to leave untampered only those literary works with "serious values."

"If we try to censor literature, not only the authors, but we will suffer. We cannot deprive ourselves of the opportunity to learn the best and the worst of life," he added.

Gertz is a professor of law as well as a practicing attorney in Chicago. A collection of Henry Miller materials is presently on loan from him to Morris Library, and is on exhibit in the Rare Book Room.

Arends to retire; 40 years service

KANKAKEE (AP)—"I was brought up right," Rep. Leslie C. Arends once said. "As a Republican."

When Arends retires from Congress next year, he will have devoted 32 of his 40 years on Capitol Hill to his party—as whip, or floor leader responsible for making sure party members vote right on major issues. That's the longest anyone—Democrat or Republican—has ever held such a post.

Arends, whose official biography describes him as "actively engaged in banking and farming" was first elected to Congress in 1934 from a district that begins south of Chicago and runs south into the Bloomington area.

The district lines have been redrawn several times, but Arends has always represented an area consisting predominantly of farms and small industries. And whatever the lines, the district itself has been heavily Republican, perfect for the man who was "brought up right."

In 1943—three years before freshman Congressman Richard Milhous Nixon arrived in Washington—Arends was elected Republican Whip. From then on, as floor leader and later as ranking GOP member of the House Armed Services Committee, Arends was a national figure. Representing a heavily Republican district, he campaigned little counting on local voters to reelect him on the basis of his national prestige.

Arends' voting record and his philosophy would generally be regarded as conservative, particularly on defense issues. But critics and friends agree that his success rests on his amiability rather than his ideology.

Arends looks like the prototypical Congressman. He is tall, erect, and his silver hair is just a little shaggy on the back of his neck. His friends are the right friends—he used to play golf with President Eisenhower—and his method of picking up votes is the pat on the back and the discreet whisper rather than the threat.

He has never considered himself a local Congressman in the sense that he spends much time pushing bills that will help his district.

"I look upon Congress as the Board of Directors of the biggest business in the world," he said. "The finest thing is the people can throw you out or keep you in after two years and we have to give an accounting of our stewardship to the people."

Thanksgiving dinner offered by vets club

The Veterans Club annual "Buffalo Trough" dinner will be at 2 p.m. Saturday with all SIU vets and their dates welcome.

The informal Thanksgiving dinner costs $2.50 per head, and includes sirloin steak, potato salad, beer and other refreshments. Maps showing the location of the party (Rural Route 2 in Murphysboro) are available at the Veterans Outreach office at 611 S. Washington St.

John Sheridan, club vice president, said a number of SIU administrators have been invited to the event for informal discussion. He said there were no specific activities planned.

Sheridan also mentioned any veteran joining in the Saturday visit to the Veteran's Hospital in Marion will have $1 deducted from the dinner charge. The expedition will leave at 1 p.m. from the Golden Bear restaurant, Wall Street and Grand Avenue.

'The Godfather' comes to SIU spring quarter

"The Godfather" will be shown on the SIU campus spring quarter as a part of the Student Government Activities Council.

Ellen Nemeth, film committee chairman of the SGAC, reported at Tuesday evening's SGAC meeting in Student Center room B, Nov. 11, that there will have to be advance ticket sales, but a definite date hasn't been set.

"Student IDs will be checked," said Bob Weichert, chairman of the SGAC, "because of the film's R rating." Starting in January, other films scheduled by the SGAC include "M-A-S-H," which will appear Jan. 5, "Straw Dogs," "Mad Dogs and Englishmen" with Joe Cocker, "2001: A Space Odyssey" and "Making It."

"Also spring quarter the SGAC has planned a Flash Gordon Film Festival," said Ms. Nemeth.

New journalism head sought by SIU, others

The search for a new director of the School of Journalism is proceeding on schedule. Gerald Grotta, chairman of the search committee, said Thursday.

Looking for the "best person available" the committee will take recommendations for the post through Friday, Grotta said. After receipt of a name, the committee invites the person to apply, he said, adding 37 names had been received to date.

SIU will be competing for a director with numerous other schools, said Grotta, explaining there are "a lot of openings for directors and heads of journalism throughout the country."

Chances of finding a "really top person" are reasonable, Grotta said. In addition to SIU's School of Journalism having a good national reputation, Grotta said it is one of the few schools with a complete graduate program.

Applications will be taken until Dec. 14, he said, after which the search committee will sift through the material to prepare a list of three to five names for submission to Herbert Fink, dean of Communications and Fine Arts. The final selection needs the approval of President David R. Derge.

The new director's biggest problem, Grotta said, is the same as that of virtually any other administrator in the country: trying to administer a top quality program with limited funds.

The committee's final list of applicants should be completed by the end of January, Grotta said. There will be no ranking of the names sent to Fink.

Bryce Rucker, professor of journalism, is current director of the school. His term expires June 30, 1974.

Group to fight child neglect

CHICAGO(AP)—Formation of a foundation dealing with the problems of child abuse and neglect was announced Thursday.

Initially, the foundation's activities will be conducted through the Family Life Achievement Center, established by Donna S. Bradshaw at Illinois Masonic Medical Center to deal with these problems.

Ms. Bradshaw contributed $500,000 to set up the foundation and serves as its president.

She told a news conference that the foundation's first efforts will focus on Cook County Chicago to determine what can be done to help abusive parents and their victims.

In five to ten years, she said, she hopes the foundation can establish centers dealing with child abuse and neglect across the country.

Ms. Bradshaw said at least one to two children die each day as a result of abuse by their parents.

Dr. Jerome Miller, director of the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services, said there were 1,500 reported cases in Illinois in 1972.

The foundation's activities will begin with a conference in Chicago Nov. 26 and 27 in which 80 recognized experts on the problems of child abuse and neglect will discuss what is known about them and how they might most effectively be dealt with.

Ms. Bradshaw said that following this conference more definite plans will be drawn for helping the parents and children in the Chicago area.

SIU team to host parachute contest

By David Kornblith
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The skies over Carbondale will be adorned with parachutists Nov. 22-25 when SIU hosts the National Collegiate Parachute Championships.

The SIU Parachute Club secured the annual event on a bid approved by the United States Parachute Association, Bill Wenger, club safety officer, said.

"They probably approved it because our bid was low and SIU will be easily accessible for the other competitors," Wenger said. There were 10 bidders.

Wenger said he expects in excess of 200 parachutists from more than 70 schools to participate in the event. The competitors will be dropped from seven planes over the Southern Illinois Airport.

The planes and the Nov. 24 banquet at the Student Center will be paid for by the individual registration fees, school entrance fees and jump fees, Wenger said.

Individual registration is $12. Jump fees range from $2.50 to $3.50, depending on how high the plane must go for that jumper.

The club will pay for the coke stand to be erected, the target the parachutists will shoot for, the score board and public address system.

Jumpers will compete in three events, in three different groups. The groups include novice, intermediate and advanced.

The novice category includes jumpers with less than 100 jumps, intermediate, from 100 to 300 jumps, and advanced, more than 300.

The SIU team has two contestants in each of the novice and intermediate sections and five persons in the advanced category.

Jumpers will be judged on accuracy, style and sequential relative work, Wenger said.

The jump for accuracy is made at 3,000 feet, Wenger said. The parachutist opens his chute immediately and tries to land in a designated 4-inch area. "Many times jumpers hit the disc," Wenger said.

The jumper participating in the style event exits the plane at 7,200 feet, Wenger said. At speeds of 120 m.p.h., the jumper does a freefall, which consists of a series of loops and turns. He or she is judged on precision and the time it takes him to complete the event, Wenger said.

The sequential relative work involves three jumpers who exit the plane, meet in mid-air and do a series of events together, Wenger said. Their tricks may include the formation of a star and a caterpillar. They also exit at 7,200 feet.

"SIU has a good reputation for parachuting," Wenger said. "We have won the championship twice and always place high when we don't win it." The team placed third last year.

"This year we have a good chance to beat the Air Force Academy," Wenger said. Air Force was last year's champ.

Representatives of SIU have been practicing for the events since last spring, said Wenger. "We have also been training intensively since school started this year," Wenger said. Contestants practice about 25 hours a week.

Keith McQuarrie, treasurer of the Parachute Club, and Bill Wenger, club safety officer, prepare a parachute for the National Collegiate Parachute Championships. The SIU club is hosting the event this year and expect over 200 participants. (Staff photo by Tom Porter.)

Rape cases rise on campuses

By Terry Ryan
Associated Press Writer

Rapes and assaults on coeds have become a major problem on the nation's college campuses, security officials say. They cite coed dorms, hitchhiking and lack of concern as contributing factors.

Campus administrators have responded by imposing tighter regulations in living areas, increasing police patrols and installing better locks and lights. Coeds are taking self-defense courses, and male students have started escort services on many campuses.

"Attacks on females have gone up at just about every school we have contact with," said Herbert T. Voyer, editor of the Campus Law Enforcement Journal. "It's not just a question of more women reporting it. It has happened."

Voyer is chief of security at Tufts University near Boston. Several female students have been raped on or near the campus in the past year, including one girl raped in a dormitory room during the first week of class this fall. "Now the students are up in arms demanding more security. They want me to beg the administration for money to have a man with a dog patrolling on campus."

Tufts has spent $30,000 to upgrade campus lighting, has a female security officer training at a rape crisis center and now has guards stationed inside women's dormitories.

Like nearly all campus police officials, Voyer said nonstudents were responsible for the increasing attacks on women.

The increase of rape incidents is not an isolated phenomenon but part of a general rise in campus crime during the past few years. Long considered inviolate sanctuaries, schools across the country are now plagued with incidents ranging from bicycle thefts to muggings. There are exceptions, but not many.

The rise in rape complaints on campus is also part of a nationwide situation reflected in the 70 per cent jump in reported rapes in all jurisdictions surveyed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation during the past five years.

"Crime is increasing in our society," said Audie Schuler, police chief at the University of Florida's Gainesville campus. "We live in it, so we are part of it." Twenty male students at the Florida school were hired last month to augment the campus police force after one coed was raped in a parking lot and another abducted and raped elsewhere. They are armed with whistles and badges but do not carry guns or have arrest powers.

Rape reports have mounted at big city and small town schools alike. At the University of Illinois Campaign-Urbana campus, four rapes or attempted rapes were reported in the 12 months that ended last June. Four such cases already have been reported this school year.

The increasing independence of women was cited by many security chiefs as an underlying explanation for the increase in rapes. Coeds are more likely now to work alone in a laboratory at night or walk by themselves to the library after dark. "You can come out here any night of the week and you'll see a coed walking alone," said A. L. McCoy, security chief at Louisiana State University. "You just wonder. Now, she's just not concerned. And a lot of them have the opinion. 'Well, it's just not going to happen to me.' So I don't know what the answer is."

Changes in campus living patterns have made the job of protecting all students more difficult, said security officers. Coed dorms and open living areas mean anyone can wander around without arousing suspicion, they said.

Although students just a few years ago fought for such arrangements, dormitory security is now being tightened, often at the urging of students. At the University of Pennsylvania, 300 women staged a sit-in outside the president's office demanding better protection after a series of rapes in the campus area.

Hitchhiking coeds, now a common sight around most campuses, are particularly vulnerable to attack. In addition to numerous reports of rape, hitchhiking college girls have been murdered during the past year in Boston; Ann Arbor, Mich.; and Santa Cruz, Calif.

While most coeds recognize the danger, many consider it an infringement on their freedom to be told they should not hitchhike.

"It's the only way I have of getting home," said a girl standing beside a guard booth at the edge of Indiana University's Bloomington campus with her thumb out. "Why shouldn't I?"

Fifteen rapes and at least 20 other assaults on women have been reported in Bloomington since April. Six rapes were reported in the entire county last year. The outbreak, which peaked during the summer months, has the campus and the community on edge. Response has varied.

A feminist group called WAR—Women Against Rape—has urged every woman to carry a whistle while walking at night and organized a campaign to establish "safe houses" on every block where women could seek refuge.

Escort services have been started in three of the university's dormitory complexes. In Teter Quadrangle, on one of the dormitories, 75 male volunteers signed up to escort coeds around campus after dark.

"I got one call the first week of the program and have not received any since," said William Barnard, a freshman who was photographed and issued an identification card by the escort service. "Most of the guys I know report about the same response."

Similar services have sprung up at other schools. The University of Colorado now has "People Walkers," and a fraternity at the University of Rochester this fall started a "Dial-A-Sam" program. Self-defense classes for women have blossomed on campuses from Boston to Berkeley, Calif. About 100 Indiana University coeds are enrolled in karate and judo classes. While women's groups support them as a measure to counter the passivity they say is bred into American women, some people doubt their real value in deterring rape.

Campus security officers said a woman's best defense still was to scream for all she is worth.

Frampton displays versatility at Convo

By Linda Lipman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Mac Frampton Trio, performing music from the classical through contemporary periods, excited their "intimate little crowd" with their professionalism and versatility at Wednesday night's Convocation at the Student Center.

Mac Frampton, pianist, is the main attraction of the trio which also contains a talented string bass player and drummer. Frampton's fingers dance across the keyboard strumentation, rather than relying on vocal interpretation.

After his one solo during "Shaft," the bass player was applauded enthusiastically by the audience. String bass players are not common in rock bands in Carbondale.

The drummer also had his chance for the spotlight. He used his drum section, which included a kettle drum and triangle, with variety.

The group began the concert in black tuxedos with Frampton in black velvet and later changed to individual stage outfits with Frampton in sparkling white.

like a virtuoso who truly knows and loves his instrument. Solos by Frampton, who resembles Liberace at the piano, comprised half the show. The other half was performed by the ensemble, with short solos by drummer and bass player.

The music ranged from Bach to Gershwin, to Mason Williams and Roberta Flack. The group's own arrangements were also included. Throughout his hour and a half performance, Frampton showed expressions of dedication and emotion for his music.

In playing "Rhapsody in Blue," the Frampton's solo rendition cut the 15-minute orchestration to seven minutes. And in another number, "MacArthur's Park," the ensemble brought out the intensity of the in-

Workshop slated at Student Center

A one-day workshop for directors of in-service nurses' training will be held Friday in the Mississippi Room of the Student Center.

Sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education, the workshop is the second in a series of four training periods designed to help in-service directors develop better training programs and improve their educational skills.

The session will use video taped clips of actual training classes to study techniques of good teaching methods. Richard Verduin, education professor, will preside.

Two more workshops are scheduled. On Dec. 14, the techniques of good teaching will be concluded and the use of media in instruction will be examined. On Jan. 18, the topic will be the orientation of new personnel.

Fans pleased with lift of football blackouts, football's T.V.exposure

By The Associated Press

Football fans are happy with the lifting of pro football's television blackout—but if it starts to hurt home attendance, they would be willing to see the blackout reinstated. And they're happy with the amount of football being televised now.

The lifting of the blackout on sold-out home games is in the first year of a three-year experiment, the result of congressional legislation. NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle contends it will hurt the game by cutting sharply into attendance.

A copyrighted Chicago Tribune Story Thursday, reporting on the results of a Louis Harris poll, said the early reports on "no-shows"—fans who purchase tickets but fail to attend games—are pretty spotty and that the real test will come when winter's cold and snow grips the National Football League's northern cities.

In the nationwide poll, a cross-section of 1,761 fans was asked, in part:

"Do you favor or oppose the lifting of the blackout on home pro football games in the areas where the games are being played?"

Sixty-eight per cent of the fans said they favored lifting the blackout, 23 per cent said they opposed it and the remaining 9 per cent said they were not sure. Then they were asked: "Suppose the recently lifted blackout on pro football telecasts does result in substantial decrease in attendance at the actual games. Would you favor or oppose reinstating the blackout on home pro football games in the areas where the games are played?"

To this, 45 per cent said they would favor restoring the blackout, 35 per cent they would oppose a return to the pre-1973 blackout policy and 20 per cent had no opinion.

The fans were also asked: "Do you feel there is too much, too little, or about the right amount of exposure of pro football on television right now?"

Fifty per cent said there was about the right amount, 28 per cent said there was too much, 11 per cent said there wasn't enough and 2 per cent said they weren't sure.

AL considering runner rule for 1974 season

BOSTON (AP)—American League owners are considering adoption of a designated runner rule for the 1974 season that would be similar to this year's designated hitter rule.

"I know it was discussed at Tuesday's meeting in Chicago," Thomas S. Monahan, a league spokesman, said Thursday. "I don't know of any concrete move on it yet. It will come up at the December meeting in Houston."

Earlier, the Cleveland Plain Dealer reported that the owners had secretly approved the rule.

It was proposed by Charles O. Finley, owner of the Oakland A's, the newspaper said, and approved by owners of the Cleveland Indians, New York Yankees, Kansas City Royals, Minnesota Twins, Milwaukee Brewers and Texas Rangers.

Opposed were the Baltimore Orioles, Detroit Tigers, Boston Red Sox, California Angels and Chicago White Sox.

Women enter Chicago meet

The women's varsity volleyball team gets another chance to flex their muscles when SIU competes in the Illinois State Volleyball Meet at the Chicago Circle Campus over the weekend.

Seventeen schools will play in the annual tournament for the state title. SIU gets into the action on Friday when they face North Central College.

Women's Gym offers facilities

The Women's Gym is open from 7-10 p.m. on Friday and Saturday and from 2-5 p.m. on Sundays for anyone wanting to use the gym's facilities. Some of the activities offered include basketball, volleyball, badminton and exercising. All that is needed is an SIU I.D. card and a pair of tennis shoes.

NFL clears 'dirty' Raiders

NEW YORK (AP)—The National Football League has apparently cleared the Oakland Raiders of all charges of "dirty tricks" leveled at them by the Pittsburgh Steelers following last Sunday's game in Oakland.

The Steelers won the game 17-9, then complained that the Raiders had smeared their uniforms with a greasy substance.

Soccer Club match slated

The SIU International Soccer Club has accepted a challenge from a group of SIU student soccer players from Africa to play a match.

The game will be played at 1 p.m. Sunday at McAndrew Stadium. Admission is free and everyone is invited to attend.

Tailbacks could control offensive outcome in SIU-Sycamore game

By Mark Tupper

Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

SIU and Indiana State could be involved in a battle of tailbacks at 2 p.m. EST, Saturday in Terre Haute, Ind., when the Salukis run Larry Perkins and Melvin Moncrief against the Sycamore's freshman speedster, Vincent Allen.

Gaining 861 yards in the Sycamores first ten games, Allen has scored seven touchdowns and was labeled by SIU Assistant Coach Joe Kinnan as "an outstanding running back," who Indiana State likes to use 20-25 times each game.

Allen, who did not become a full-time player until mid-season, needs only 96 yards to tie Willie Lee's single-season rushing record, 139 yards to become Indiana State's first 1,000-yarder and 28 carries to become the Sycamore's busiest ball handler in a season.

In the meantime, the Salukis have not just been standing in place. SIU's two tailbacks, Perkins and Moncrief, have combined for 1,464 yards in nine games. Admittedly, some of Moncrief's yardage has been gained as a fullback, but the majority of it has come while at tailback.

Allen is not the only worry the Salukis will have against Indiana State. The Sycamore offensive line has two huge hulks who can blow open the kind of holes that can make a good tailback get great yardage.

Chris Hicks, a sophomore from Cincinnati, Ohio, stands 6-5 and weighs a solid 267 pounds. Next to him on the line is center John Brewer, who graduated from the same high school Vincent went to. Although only 6-1 in height, Brewer is very mobile with his hefty 277 pounds.

This Salukis last win away from home came at the end of the 1971 campaign, and the out-of-town drought has SIU Coach Dick Towers concerned. "I'm worried about the Indiana State game, because we have not played well on the road all year," Towers said. "Our football team has to come alive with the same enthusiasm at Terre Haute that they do at Carbondale."

A victory at Terre Haute and another at Bloomington Saturday, Nov. 24 against Illinois State, would end the Salukis season with a 5-5-1 mark. Indiana State, currently 3-7, will be playing its last game of the season Saturday.

Common opponents between the two schools this season have been Northern Illinois, Ball State and Akron. The Sycamores lost to Northern 42-24, while the Salukis dropped their decision with the Huskies 34-28.

Ball State nipped Indiana State 18-17, while the Salukis were able to get a 16-16 tie: SIU got by Akron on homecoming 14-13, but the Zips took the loss out on the Scyamores the following week, 31-14.

Whatever the outcome of the game, the two teams will meet each other early next fall in the Sept. 21 battle to be the first game played in remodeled McAndrew Stadium.

Volleyballers to travel

The SIU Volleyball Club will travel to St. Louis Sunday to play in the St. Louis Volleyball Association Fellowship Tournament.

Teams participating in the tournament are the Missouri Athletic Club, Western Illinois University, Washington University and others.

The club practices from 7-9 p.m. every Tuesday and Thursday at the Arena. Anyone interested in joining the club may stop by the Arena during practice or see James Wilkinson at the Arena, Room 118r, said Gene Korieiek, club president.

Crenshaw closes gap on Watson

By Bob Green

Associated Press Golf Writer

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP)—Leader Tom Watson blew to a fat, five-over-par 76 and opened the gate to a stunning charge by rookie Ben Crenshaw Thursday in the sixth round of the $500,000 World Open Golf Tournament, the richest such event ever staged.

The 21-year-old Crenshaw, winner of the San Antonio Open two weeks ago, came from 18 strokes back with an eye-popping seven-under-par 64 in dusty, swirling winds and moved to within six strokes of the lead.

Watson, who matched the course record on the 7,007-yard No. 2 course at the Pinehurst Country Club with a 62 in Wednesday's fifth round, soared 14 strokes higher with wildly erratic play that included an eagle, two birdies, five bogeys and a triple bogey seven.

With two rounds to go in this 144-hole, two-week event that offers $100,000 to the winner, Watson had a 423 total and, at three under par, was the only man in the field at sub-par figures.

Crenshaw's round vaulted him past 25 players and into a tie for second at 429. He shared that position with Miller Barber, who had a 73, and Jerry Heard, with a 72.

Allen Miller, who had a 70, followed at 430. Leonard Thompson, 72, and Bobby Mitchell, 75, were at 431.

Gibby Gilbert, who led the first four rounds of this event and was alone in second going into the day's play, stumbled and strained to an incredible 82, 11 over par, and fell far back in the pack at 435.

Watson, a second-year touring pro who has yet to win, somehow managed to retain a six-stroke lead.

Crenshaw, a three-time national college champion from Texas, won the Texas Open just a week after gaining his card as an approved tournament player.

His 64 was by far the best round of the windy day. Arnold Palmer was next with a 68 that left him still 13 strokes back at 436. Billy Casper had 74-438. South African Gary Player 76-439 and Masters champion Tommy Aaron 76-439.

Assist leader DiGregorio needs assist on defense

By HAL BOCK

Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The whispers all around the National Basketball Association say that the "D" in Ernie DiGregorio doesn't exactly stand for defense.

The word is that opposing guards look forward to match-ups that pit them against Buffalo's high-priced rookie backcourtman.

DiGregorio smiles when you mention the criticism.

"There's no question in my mind," says DiGregorio, "that I have what it takes to be one of the very best guards in this league."

What it takes is playmaking, the ability to score points, and defense. Ernie has had no trouble in the first department. He's leading the league in playmaking with close to eight assists a game and set a Buffalo club record with 14 in his first game with the team.

His scoring has been adequate with an average of better than 17 points per game. That leaves defense...a problem for DiGregorio so far.

"Sure I've heard the talk about my defense," he says. "Anytime anybody says something about it, it offends you. But look, we've only played 17 games. I'm still going around the league for the first time. There's a lot to learn. I'll be a lot better the second time around."

DiGregorio is a mere mortal-sized 6-footer which is all right walking down the street but can be a problem living in the giant world of the NBA. He tries to overlook his relative shrimp size.

"You play on your talents and the things you do best," he says. "If you're good enough, that'll carry you."
